

What I Chose
By Elisha Lucero

I.

I spoke to God,
hands dipped into the shoreline
of the Vancouver Pacific.
She said, "Everything will be fine.
This is all for peace of mind.
To piece it together, my
fragmented,
never idle,
ignition."

II.

I share my favourite music
as if spreading my own ashes
over the ocean. Every track lives in the soul of those I see myself in;
the edges of distinct relationships
softened by the overlap.

III.

Showing compassion
has always been
how I heal.
Not by free-will;
conditioned,
still,
entangled
in what we chose.

IV.

During February
I felt celebrated,
prayed to.
How else to repay that truth;
turn it
back to you.

V.

I spoke to God,
hands dipped into the high tide.
She said, "Everything will be fine.
This is all for peace of mind.
To piece it together, my
fragmented,
never idle,
ignition."
